FUND MANAGERS' COMMENT - Arnaud BRILLOIS

During the month of February 2020, Lazard Convertible Global PC USD share class returned -1,59% versus -1,64% for its benchmark (Thomson Reuters Convertible Global Focus USD). The fund's equity sensitivity was significantly decreased during the period, and currently stands at 41.1% versus a benchmark at 38.3%. Modified duration increased over the month and remains higher than the benchmark, standing at 2.86 versus 2.46. Security selections in US auto manufacturers, pharmaceuticals, mobile payment solutions and Chinese education added to relative performance, while US semi-conductors, communications services and European industrials detracted. Our higher equity exposure compared to the index had a negative relative impact as global equity markets fell during the month with concerns about the coronavirus propagation. Our higher sensitivity to interest rates added to relative performance with lower US and European rates. Over the month, we took some profits in the US automotive sector and increase our exposure to US software, cloud and e-commerce. We increased our exposure to Chinese social media, sportswear, European energy and online food ordering services. Overall adjustments made to the portfolio since the beginning of the virus outbreak contributed at keeping an outperformance since the beginning of the year.

We maintained our overweight exposure to the dollar and the Swiss franc against all other currencies over the month.
